As a father and son who are both highly regarded in the art world, Gerald and Lawrence Coulson share a love of the British landscape, and both produce their own style of atmospheric work that successfully captures the essence of the countryside. For Lawrence the project has been a great pleasure. He said, "I am immensely proud to be showing with my Dad, he is a massive talent and I really think both sets of work complement each other."

As an untrained artist who spent much of his working life involved with the technical side of aircraft, Gerald Coulson has turned his obsession with painting detailed pictures of soaring aircraft to a completely different genre. These days most of his artistic output is based on breathtakingly beautiful landscape pictures. Infused with a delicate touch, that depicts the effects of sunlight over land and sea, these new pieces have endorsed Gerald's reputation as one of Britain's most accomplished landscape painters.

Having been encouraged by his father to start painting at an early age, Lawrence Coulson left school to work in the retail business, until he was confident enough that he, too, could earn a living as a full time artist. Today his body of work has earned him great respect in the art world, who have awarded him two major artistic prizes in the last few years.

This new collection, that allows father and son to collaborate in an exhibition of both of their work, will be an opportunity to view an inspiring selection of landscape paintings.
