Time to help bbcchildreninneed

In celebration of 26 years of BBC Children In Need, six of the UK's top contemporary artists have each produced a stunning piece of art to portray what the Appeal means to them

These six unique images will be released as time-limited edition prints. This means they will only be available to buy from galleries from 1st to 30th November 2005 - making them very rare and special pieces.

Artists will be donating all artists royalties from mounted time-limited print sales and publisher Washington Green will match that figure as well as donating proceeds from an on-line auction of the originals - all in all they are hoping to raise a substantial sum for BBC Children In Need.

"Twenty six years after it first hit our screens, BBC Children In Need is very much part of the UK psyche. This amazing collection of art is a unique insight into what this fantastic charity means to a selection of the country's top artists

- each a specialist in their own field," said Glyn Washington, Managing Director of Washington Green.

Ranging from the childlike innocence depicted in John D Wilson's painting 'Friends For Life' to the thoughtful 'Thank You' painted by Peter Smith and the wistfulness of Alexander Millar's 'All You Need Is Love', there is something for everyone.

Explaining his involvement in the project, Peter Smith said, "I'm always moved by the many stories - both happy and sad - that are aired during the Appeal, and after many years of donating to the Appeal, when I was asked if I was interested in turning my feelings into a piece of art and donating my royalties I needed no convincing."

The six time-limited edition prints will be available for a short space of time only so please contact the gallery now to reserve any pieces, or register your interest in bidding for one of the originals and join us in raising much needed money for BBC Children In Need. ■
